

A Book For Anyone Who's Ever Loved a House

Be it a cottage at the beach, a cabin in the mountains, a desert escape, or the home you grew up in, every one of us holds onto some place with affection and nostalgia.

For Sally Buffington, it's Craigville, an expansive Cape Cod cottage that is practically a member of her new husband's family—a talkative, assured group with strong customs and firmly rooted identity.

Written in poetic prose, Sally's richly blended experiences and heartfelt reflection (seasoned with humor and more than a dash of candor) will transport you to that special place in your heart.

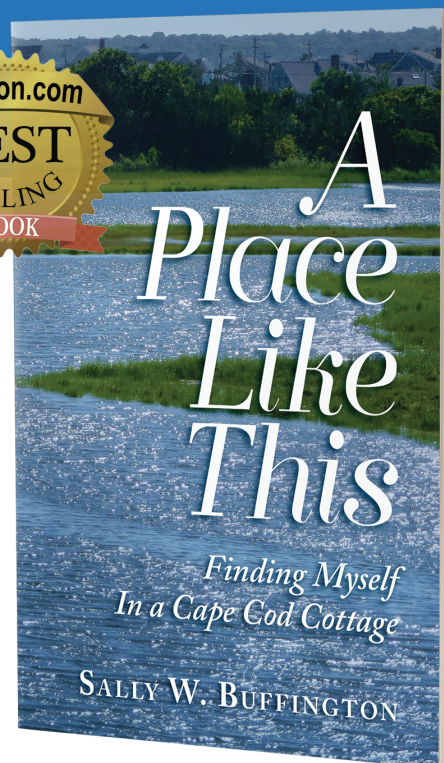

“[An] enchanting debut ... paints a vivid and lasting memory of a home with as much personality as the family who lived there.”

—BookLife Review

"This evocative memoir is written in a poetically observational style that captivates from the start."

—Kirkus Reviews

Sally Buffington is a writer, photographer, and classically trained musician. From her home in southern California, she migrates back to native ground in Massachusetts— especially her spiritual homeland of Cape Cod. Writing lyrically and imaginatively, ever aware of sensory experience and memory, Buffington takes the reader into her thoughts wherever she finds herself.
